

American Film Institute's 2007 100 Best Movies

at Ames Public Library

The American Film Institute (AFI) was created in 1967 to train the next generation of filmmakers and preserve America's fast-disappearing film heritage. Today the AFI provides leadership in screen education and recognition and celebration of excellence in the art of film, television, and digital media.

In 1997, the first "100 Best Movies" list was published after selection by AFI's blue-ribbon panel of over 1,500 leaders in the American movie community. In 2007, the list was re-done, again by the votes of a panel. This list adds movies released after 1997 and older movies that were overlooked in the 1997 list. It is in rank order, reflecting the number of votes cast for each film by the new panel of experts. The rankings may be different from those of the 1997 list, though some films maintained their previous ranks. Twenty-three movies have been added to this list, which means that an equal number of titles that were on the 1997 list no longer appear.
