Retirement Savings Plans Tables

Table #1: Individual Plans

Individual retirement savings plans have tax benefits that make them attractive ways to save for retirement on your own, either in addition to an employer plan or when you're not covered by such a plan. To be eligible to contribute, you must have earned income. Alimony counts as earned income. While you can have more than one individual IRA account, and even more than one type of account, your total contributions to all of your individual accounts cannot exceed the annual contribution limit or the amount that you earn in one year.

In return for these benefits, however, you must follow specific rules on how much you put aside each year and how you take money out. You must also take the initiative to set up and contribute to these plans on your own, but you have the right to choose where to open your account and which investments to make.

Table #2: Employer Plans

Your employer may offer a retirement plan as part of your employee benefits package. Sometimes you must be on the job a specific period of time before qualifying to participate. You fund traditional employer plans by deferring a portion of your pretax salary, reducing your current taxable income. However, with a Roth 401(k) or Roth 403(b), you contribute after-tax income and may qualify for tax-free withdrawals. Some employers may also match part of your contribution. A typical formula might be 50% of your contribution, up to 5% or 6% of your salary.

All contributions to all employer-sponsored retirement plan have the opportunity to grow tax-deferred. As with individual retirement plans, in exchange for tax advantages, there are certain contribution limits and withdrawal restrictions.

Table #3: Small Business Plans

Certain types of retirement savings plans are designed specifically for small businesses and self-employed people. These plans give you access to some of the same types of tax advantages found in other employer plans, but with the additional flexibility you might need if you work for yourself or for a small business.

Among their advantages are that the annual contribution limits are higher than with any other plan, individual or employer sponsored, and the choice of investments may be broader than with other employer plans.
